Cartesian dualism operates in the modern myth as a generative principle of ever expanding sets of opposing pairs such as mind-world, culture-nature, representation-reality, and the like. This book demonstrates and enacts the power of strong stories: to change our understandings, to open other worlds, to give us untamed glimpses of substantive alternatives for life on Earth. Her answer is to collapse the distinction between the content and the form of her ethnography by bringing to light that her ethnography is itself an enactment of the knowledge practices being ethnographed.
